

West side

Date

Fri, 12/27/2024 - 12:30

Activity

Skiing

I slid down the ridgeline between Truman and Jones Creek on Friday. Dug a quick pit where Alex likes to dig on the wnw aspect of the shoulder next to the main path. Melt/freeze at the ground about a foot thick, ten inches of loose facets on that, and a wind crust topping it 1-4 inches thick. And 5 inches of new snow. I skied the ridge down and the old drifts were supportable but intermittent. Eighteen inches of faceted snow in between that made for challenging skiing. It will be interesting to see what 2 inches of snow will do

Region

Bridger Range

Location (from list)

Truman Gulch

Observer Name

Pat Hinz